

Project Leadership Evaluation

Complex, challenging situations require project managers to maintain their course of action, while remaining emotionally stable and motivated. They must also communicate effectively and motivate the team to accomplish project goals. In the context of these challenges, coaching assessments must provide mindful reflection of project processes, as well as the swift and clear translation of measures into action.

Coaching assessments for project managers must account for both critical reflection of (personal) patterns fast, practical applicability.

Project Leadership Coaching focuses explicitly on critical success dimensions of leadership. Based on scientific evaluations (PLE) of areas of strength and development, coaching may concentrate on project demands and management potential development.

TEST PROFILE

The PLE provides insight to:

- 4 main success dimensions
- Comprehensive potential evaluation of 16 detailed factors
- Exact descriptions of strengths and development areas
- Aggregated individual results and anonymous summaries of overall team performance (Project Leadership Rating), and benchmarks
- Individualized core development areas in line with Project Leadership Programs

APPLICATION

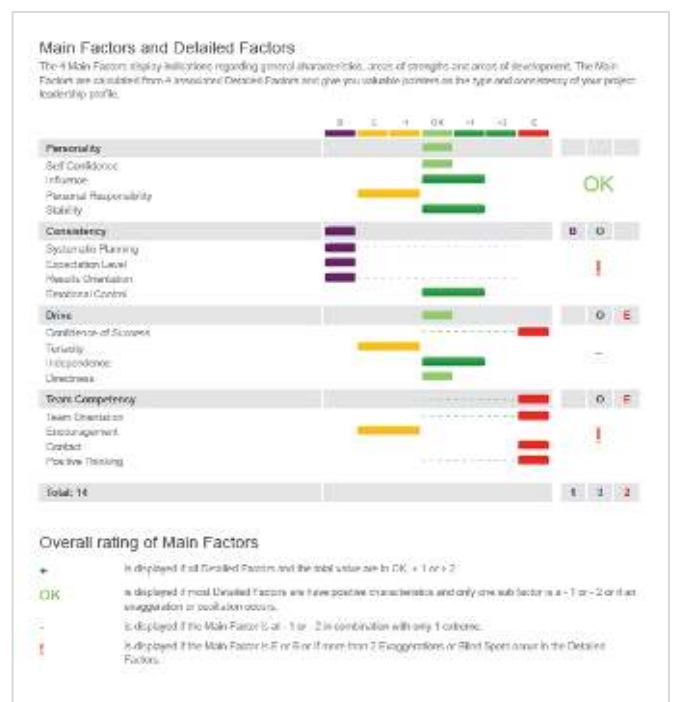

The PLE focuses on project management issues such as:

- Which employees have the potential to handle project management challenges?
- How fit are current project managers?
- How and by which means can project managers improve their potential?
- How efficient is the current project management performance compared to other businesses?
- Who are the top performers? Who needs assistance in management development?
- How motivated are project managers to engage in a process for management development?
